The New Hampshire Women's Foundation Welcomes Five New Board Members

The New Hampshire Women's Foundation is pleased to welcome five new members to its Board of Directors.

Jeff Feingold from New London is Editor of New Hampshire Business Review, where he has worked for a total of 28 years. He has been a longtime regular panelist on public affairs shows on both public and commercial TV and radio, including New Hampshire Public Radio and New Hampshire Public Television.

Kristen Oliveri from Manchester is the Director of Communications at the New Hampshire Charitable Foundation, where she is responsible for all aspects of strategic communications and marketing. Kristen came to the Foundation from the high-tech world — her interest spurred by a partnership between the Foundation and industry to increase the impact of charitable giving.

Mica Stark from Durham serves as the Assistant Vice President for Public Affairs at the University of New Hampshire and oversees federal and state government relations, media relations, advocacy, and leadership communications. Prior to working at UNH, Mica was the managing director at the New Hampshire Institute of Politics where he led and created civic engagement programs for young people and managed five presidential debates

Amy Sterndale from Durham is responsible for overseeing all strategic communications for the Carsey School of Public Policy at the University of New Hampshire. Prior to joining Carsey, Amy worked at Random House, where she oversaw the promotion of titles by former presidents and business leaders, health experts and historians, including twenty-seven New York Times best sellers.

Daniel Weeks from Nashua is Executive Director of Open Democracy, a nonpartisan nonprofit working to increase civic engagement and ensure equal representation for women and men of all backgrounds in the Granite State. A decade-long advocate for democratic reform, he previously served as president of Americans for Campaign Reform and founding director of the Money and Politics Project in South Africa.

The mission of the NH Women's Foundation is to promote opportunity and equality for women and girls in NH through research, education, philanthropy, and advocacy. To learn more about the organization, visit www.nhwomensfoundation.org.
